

There are artists
There are museums
There are entrances with perforated tickets
There are lockers
There are guards,
There are cleaners, accountants, tax declarations, working hours.
There is a door matt
There is a CCTV camera
There is an electrician signing in for an appointment.
There are squaremeters
There is a city council
There's phone.
There is lunch break.
There is coffee.
There's fair trade.
There is schrimp
There is paella
There are pans.
There is Egyptian art
There is sour dough found in ansient Egyptian pots
There are scientists
There's research
There's the Nobel prize.
There are bookshelves
There is zeitgeist
There's social media.
There are hard drives
There are routers
There are undersea internet cables.
There is national security
There is Jason Bourne
There are film theaters, film festivals, juries.
There are taxi's
There is tourism
There is booking.com

There is privilege

There are skyscrapers

There's the financial crash there's lottery.

There is DHL

There is air.

There is smoking.

There's television

There's time.

There is history

There are nationalities

There is language

There is money

But there is no artist fee.